'The Serbian army, the prisoners say, is only held together by the stanchness and obstinacy of the old Serbian element, which is fighting a last desperate struggle, but is dispirited and convinced that ultimate defeat is inevitable. The desertions and the heavy losses by the Serbians in cannon and war material are declared to have made their defensive fight a hopeless one.

"Difficulties of the Austro-German when the question was put he had disappeared. Cheers greeted the question and members called out, "He was here; he is in the house," and Mr. Hogge, one of the prominent baiters, asked, "Why has he run away?"

Several days later he expressed regret that he was not present when the question was asked, saying he meant that the delay was incidental to the joint action in military and diplomatic affairs of the various allied governments among whom the responsibility was shared.

"Difficulties of the Austro-German and Bulgarian advance in first the swamps and then the mountainous district of Serbia are described by the prisoners, who say that in some places cannon had to be dragged across a coording to the Times' parliamentary roadless country by oxen, sometimes twelve being hitched to a gun."

A member of the Bulgarian legation in Berlin called attention to the statements that a large number of rifles had been picked up along the line of march, as also were pieces of artillery and ammunition wagons with the har-ness cut and the horses gone. He regarded it as improbable that any considerable body of troops could escape across the Montenegrin or Albanian frentiers.
